THE CAVALRY RECRUIT. Arn-The fine Old English Gentleman.

A fine young Alabamian.
When this war first broke out,
A hearty able-bodled man,

From the Mobile Tribune.]

Co-sidered pretty atout-He went and pined the cavalry,
And thought it mighty fine.
To prance upon the barbed steel,
And ent a dr hing shine.
(Chosena,)

This five young Alabamian, This Cavairy Recruit.

But t'was not any length of time, T forche found a change. And when his Captain at blm swore, Re thought it very strange. That one could cuts a gentleman, And then not be called out.

For le ar thiers in Alabama,

Several fits he'd fout.

This five young Alaba mian, &c.

He went into the tented field, But many that had he;
And there he got the measles, and
A shell of distribee,
Which laid him flat upon his back, And made him very thin.
Uatil he thought that all his bonca
Would come poking through his skin
The tine young Alabamian, &c.

The ladies bless 'em! then they came, To belp him through h's woes, But the more that blessed creature knows The curiouser she grows.

And though he tried to whip the bush,

And though he tried to wint the black,
And make 'hem comprehend,
On him the question they would press,
'What alls you, Christian friend?'
Oh, this poor young Alabanian, de-He was not burted in the head,

He was not burted in the head.

Nor yet in leg or arm;

From bayonet, sword or musires talls,

He'd ne'er experienced harm,

But at last in agony he cries.

To save much misery—

"Ob, Lord' my goodness, gracious gais

I've got the diarhea!"

This poor young Alabamian, &c.

But here his troubles d.d'nt end, For when he better got,
The Doctor him a paper gave,
And fold him home to trot! He thought he was a happy man,
A furloughed man was he,
And he talked about the wany fight;

This fine young Alabamian, & ...

At last the corneript officer
Into his section came.
A grabling all the broken armed,
The one eyed and the lame;
Among the very first he nathed
Was this, our dragoon gent,
And told him that his paper wasn't
Worth a cussed cent,
Alas, this Alabamian, &c.

They took him to the conscript camp,
Where he a month was kept,
Where young licutenants strutted round,
And cussed and swore and west;
And very much against his will,
They made him infantry;
Although he certified on oath

Although he certified on oath

He was a cavalry.

This time young Alabamian, &c. Rear tank bigh private now he is, And though he's cites powerful skeered.
He knows he's bound to stand;
Half rations, too, he's doomed to cat,
And ragged are his clother. Yet notwithstanding all of that. At double quick he goes.

This and young Alabamian,

Attention of the second States to the old Union, the New York Herald says:

In the settlement of this question, therefore, we think it may be safely assumed that President Lincoln has broken ground for the next President years and has very broadly intimated that his platform will be that of the conservatives; that his policy will be the restoration of the second States as soon as any or all of them may choose to return, and with their local institutions, including slavery, just as the war may practically have left them. In other words, we adhere to the epinion that the Secondary of State spake by authority in his letter to the French Government suggesting that therefore to both Houses of the Federal Congress of the members due from any secreded States will be regarded as sufficient for the rehabitation of such State, with all its old constitutional rights, as one of the United States in good standing.
